

3.1 Staff Motivation

Motivating Factors To keep workplace productivity and performance high, it is important to create a company culture where employees are engaged actively, motivated to grow and succeed in their roles in the organisation. Therefore, staff motivation is the key to develop an effective and productive workplace.

The motivating factors might include:

- financial incentives
- flexible time options
- recognition to co-workers/higher management
- rewards incentives, such as shopping vouchers
- positive reinforcement
- share in profits.

Types of Motivation Techniques (K5, A5) Motivation techniques can be internal or external influences that contribute to high productivity, work satisfaction and meaningful contribution to projects. Managers, supervisors and team leaders could use some of the following motivational techniques to help encourage and inspire their staff and teams to perform better.

1. Performance appraisal can be a motivation tool. Through evaluating the performance of staff and teams, their efficiency can be evaluated by the targets they have achieved. The recognition that they have achieved their targets can motivate them to strive to perform better in the future with new targets.
2. Conduct regular Staff Satisfaction Survey to assure staff and teams that their input to improve the working conditions of the workplace is important to the company. Take immediate actions after gathering the results from the survey will show the staff that their opinions are valued and the company is sincere in wanting them to be happy in their positions and will take the steps necessary to make that happen. This will create a positive culture to maintain the motivation of the staff and teams.
3. Develop Staff Development Plans to encourage the staff to engage in professional development. This will make it easier for them to acquire new skills and/or enhance their competencies if they seek to build their career to grow with the company.
4. Set intermittent goals that are smaller, specific and measurable goals. Letting the staff or teams to set their own goals that are reasonable and achievable can keep them motivated and encouraged when they hit notable milestones. Small wins.
5. Celebrate smaller milestones and achievements to encourage the team to stay connected to the project and focused on the larger goal. Gratitude and validation are an important part of recognising these milestones. However, tangible rewards, such as financial bonuses, a lunch party, time off or a gift cards for meeting milestones, can motivate everyone.

6. Create a mentorship programme to pair the more experienced staff with the less experienced ones to guide them along their career journey and offer words of advice and encouragement daily. The mentors are there to help their mentees to sort out their difficult situations by listening, empathising and working through their solutions with them. They are also there to celebrate their successes.
 7. Encourage mindfulness to encourage the staff to de-stress and take short breaks during the workday if they feel stuck about the direction of a project. Taking a few moments of quiet can provide the motivation they need to clear their thoughts. This could mean a brief walk outside or a trip to a nearby café.
 8. Create an incentive programme to reward staff members for consistently working hard to achieve milestones or successes. Other than connecting the incentives to performance, they would be linked to other activities such as participating in some skilled training programmes.

2) Role Play Assessment: Motivating Staff 'AAA'

Context: Staff 'AAA' is meticulous with logistics and cost-saving but struggles with interpersonal "flare-ups" and meeting client visit KPIs. To align her with the mission of enabling independent elderly living through meaningful activities, the following techniques will be used:

Technique 1: Mentorship Programme

- Action: I will pair 'AAA' with a Senior Social Service professional who excels in elder communication.
- Goal: The mentor will help 'AAA' navigate "difficult situations" such as client impatience or delays at clinics by teaching empathy and de-escalation. This directly supports the mission of enriching lives through positive engagement. By listening and empathising with 'AAA's' own frustrations, the mentor can guide her to turn her talent for being "meticulous" into a tool for better client care.

Technique 2: Set Intermittent Goals (Small Wins)

- Action: Instead of just a 3-month goal of 24 visits, we will set a weekly goal of 2 clients.
- Goal: Breaking the target into "smaller, specific and measurable goals" makes the task less overwhelming while 'AAA' balances her report-writing duties. Hitting these weekly milestones provides "small wins" that keep her motivated to maintain the frequency of visits necessary to help elders remain independent at home.

Technique 3: Incentive Programme linked to Training

- Action: We will link rewards (like shopping vouchers or time off) to the successful completion of her Microsoft Office and "Work in a Team" training programs.
 - Goal: This rewards 'AAA' for "participating in skilled training programmes". As she gains "competency in Microsoft Office," her report-writing will become more "efficient," freeing up more time for her to focus on the organization's core strategic goal: providing community assistance to the elderly.

NEGOTIATION TECHNIQUES

Be hard on the problem and soft on the person

- Be assertive, rather than passive or aggressive. This might mean approaching others with "I" statements, rather than directly criticising them. For example: "I sense that you are angry about an aspect of the job role and this seems to be affecting your work relationships with others", rather than "everyone is complaining that you never communicate with them".
- It is easier to confront an issue to remain objective.
- Be strict when dealing with the issue and avoid emotional attachment.
- Do not condemn the person; focus on the issue.

Focus on needs, not positions

- Be impartial. Listen to both sides of the argument and focus on the real issues, rather than letting petty differences get in the way.
- It is not about winning. It is about collaboration.
- Do not create a hierarchy between negotiators.

Emphasise common ground

- Maximise positive communication by encouraging the conflicting parties to find some mutual ground, no matter how small. For example, if the end goal of all parties is the benefit of the clients, then focus on what will help them to achieve this. This means all parties agree that arguments should not be held in presence of the clients.
- Highlight what is already agreed upon.
- Celebrate the shared vision.

Be inventive about options

- Focus on a mutually agreeable goal and support both sides of the conflict to reach set goals.
 - Be creative with solution ideas.
 - Do not disregard the obvious.

1) Counseling: Improving Teamwork and Emotional Management

Objective: To address the "flare-ups" and communication gaps while aligning the staff with the mission of providing independent living for the elderly.

- Acknowledge Intentions: Start by validating that her actions, such as changing the logistics list to cut costs, came from a "good intention" to help the organization financially.
- Impact of Emotions: Discuss how "tempers flaring" and being "impatient and annoyed" with clients and external clinic staff negatively affects the service quality and team morale.
- Constructive Action: Agree on using "mindfulness" (taking short breaks when feeling stuck) and "mentorship" (pairing with a senior professional) to handle the stress of client interactions and medical delays.

2) Identifying Shortcomings and Action Plan

Based on the appraisal feedback, these are the two primary shortcomings affecting performance:

1. Interpersonal Communication & Collaboration: AAA often works in isolation, being "very quiet" in meetings and making unilateral decisions without consulting project coordinators (e.g., the conflict with John).
2. Emotional Regulation under Pressure: Instances of "flare-ups" with clinic staff and impatience toward elderly clients indicate a need for better emotional control.

Agreed Action to Improve Teamwork:

- Active Participation: AAA will commit to "participate actively in all team meetings" and proactively support team members to achieve organization goals, ensuring all logistical changes are cleared with the designated coordinator first.

3) Resolution for Conflict between "AAA" and John

Using the "Negotiation Techniques", here is the resolution strategy for the logistics list dispute:

Technique	Application to AAA and John conflict
Be hard on the problem, soft on the person	Address the "logistics list change" as the problem. Acknowledge that while the process was flawed, neither party's character is at fault. Use "I" statements: "I sense there is frustration regarding the workflow".
Focus on the needs, not the positions	Move past the "I'm the coordinator" (John) vs. "I'm saving money" (AAA) stances. Focus on the shared need: an efficient, cost-effective roadshow that runs as planned.
Emphasize common ground	Highlight that both want the project to succeed. Agree that the "end goal is the benefit of the clients," which requires a unified front without public arguments.
Be inventive about options	Create a new protocol: AAA identifies cost-saving opportunities, but John, as the coordinator, must sign off on changes before vendors are notified. This supports both sides' goals.

Mediation Principles (K2, A2)

- Constructive conflict will always have a positive outcome and will often be the result of negotiation between parties involved. However, where there is conflict, there will often be a need for mediation. This is a skill that managers are often called upon to use.
Mediation is to work with all parties in a dispute, in an attempt to help them to reach an agreement.
- Mediation is a process in which a neutral third-party assists in resolving a dispute between two or more other parties. It is a non-adversarial approach to conflict resolution. The role of the mediator is to facilitate communication between the parties, assist them in focusing on the real issues of the dispute and generate options that meet the interests or needs of all relevant parties, in an effort to resolve the conflict.
- Unlike arbitration, where the intermediary listens to the arguments from all parties and makes a decision for the disputants, a mediator assists the parties to develop a solution themselves. Although mediators sometimes provide ideas, suggestions, or even formal proposals for settlement, the mediator is primarily a 'process person', helping the parties define the agenda, identify and reframe the issues, communicate more effectively, find areas of common ground, negotiate fairly and hopefully, reach an agreement. A successful mediation effort has an outcome that is accepted and owned by the parties themselves.
- Mediation is widely used in a range of disputes. Many disputes that have not responded to an initial attempt at negotiation can still be settled through mediation. Even when conflicts are seemingly intractable, they sometimes yield to mediation. Mediation is of particular importance in long-running, deep-rooted conflicts, as this type of conflict is rarely resolved without such outside assistance. Even if the full range of grievances cannot be resolved, mediation is often useful for dealing with particular limited aspects of the wider conflict.

2) Mediation Strategy for Staff 'AAA'

To reach an agreement on managing project expenditures and improving productivity, I will apply the following mediation principles with 'AAA' and the project team:

Principle 1: Assisting Parties to Develop a Solution Themselves

Instead of the management imposing a strict spending rule, I will act as a "process person" to facilitate a meeting between 'AAA' and John. We will work together to define an agenda that acknowledges 'AAA's' talent for cost-cutting while respecting John's role as project coordinator. By allowing them to develop a solution themselves, such as a shared approval document for vendor changes, the final outcome will be "accepted and owned" by both, preventing future "flare-ups" and improving team productivity.

Principle 2: Focusing on the Real Issues of the Dispute

I will help the team focus on the real issues—which is the need for clear communication regarding logistics—rather than the personality clash between 'AAA' and John. By reframing the issue from "who is in charge" to "how do we ensure the roadshow is cost-effective and carries out as planned," we move toward a non-adversarial agreement. This ensures that 'AAA's' good intentions to help the center cut down on expenditures are channeled constructively without disrupting the program's vibrancy.

Workplace Counselling Difference between Coaching and Counselling (K3)

- Coaching is an ongoing developmental process that enables employees to develop whatever skills they need to improve their performance within a constructive environment.
- Counselling is similar to coaching in that it is a one-on-one activity. However, it is needed when the staff is having issues or challenges that are affecting his/her work. These issues could be either personal or professional but are always work-related.

Counselling Role of a Leader One of the many roles managers play at work is that of a counsellor. A counsellor is someone who can help others with a problem. Through counselling, the leader helps the staff to deal with his/her personal and work issues which are affecting their work performance. Erratic work performance, refuse to incorporate with other team members, failure to achieve work goals, and/or inability to meet deadlines are some of the indicators of poor work performance.

Benefits of Workplace Counselling

- Reduced absenteeism and presenteeism
- Increased productivity and motivation
- Improved employee health and wellbeing
- Improved organizational culture

How to Provide Workplace Counselling to Staff The aim of counselling is to:

- Listen and empathise with the staff.
 - Offer feedback on his/her work performance.
 - Help the staff to identify the problem.
 - Support the employee to find a solution.
 - Refer to professional help if necessary.

2) Coaching 'AAA' for a Win-Win Conflict Strategy

As a leader performing workplace counselling, the goal is to help 'AAA' move past her conflict with John by adopting a Win-Win strategy. This approach aims to fix the underlying problem rather than assigning blame.

A. Identify the Shortcomings and Root Causes

Through private counselling, we will listen and empathise to identify why these issues occur:

1. Failure to Incorporate with Team Members: AAA's tendency to change logistic lists without consulting John (the project coordinator) is a clear indicator of poor work performance that disrupts team goals.
2. Emotional Regulation (Erratic Performance): Her "flare-ups" and impatience with clients and external staff are symptoms of an underlying challenge in managing workplace stress.

B. Coaching for the Win-Win Strategy

To resolve the issue with John and prepare for future projects, 'AAA' will be coached to apply the following:

- Fix the Problem, Not the Person: Instead of feeling "confronted" by John, 'AAA' should view the conflict as a breakdown in the communication process.
- Consider All Points of View: AAA must acknowledge John's need for "color and vibrancy" in the roadshow, while John must acknowledge AAA's "good intention" to cut expenditures.
- Design the Best Outcome: A conversation will ensue where both parties agree to a new protocol: AAA identifies cost-savings, and John approves them before vendor contact.

C. Agreed Action Plan for Improvement

To ensure the team moves forward effectively, 'AAA' agrees to:

- Develop Emotional Intelligence: Use "mindfulness" breaks during stressful clinic waits to manage emotions constructively.
- Active Teamwork: Attend a 2-day "Work in a Team" course (MDIS) to learn effective communication and how to provide better support to team members.
- Mutual Respect: Commit to the "zero complaints" goal and be polite when fronting both clients and colleagues to rebuild trust.

the drafted documents and scripts based on the provided appraisal notes, motivation techniques, mediation principles, and win-win negotiation strategies.

1) Script: One-on-One Counseling Meeting (Workplace Coach & AAA)

Objective: To motivate AAA and address performance shortcomings using coaching and empathy.

Coach: "AAA, thank you for meeting with me. I wanted to start by recognizing your efforts in the recent roadshow. The Centre Manager specifically noted how meticulous you were with the equipment arrivals. Your desire to help the center cut costs is a great asset to our mission of being fiscally responsible."

AAA: "Thank you. I just want the center to save money where it can."

Coach: "I appreciate that. However, I've noticed some challenges when things get stressful, like at the clinics or during the roadshow setup. I sense you might be feeling overwhelmed by the report-writing workload, which affected your client visits. How can we work together to manage that stress?"

AAA: "The reports take a lot of time, and sometimes I get frustrated when others don't see the cost savings I find."

Coach: "I hear you. To help you grow, I'd like to pair you with a mentor to help navigate those difficult client interactions. We're also setting a smaller, weekly goal of 2 client visits so it feels more manageable. This is about giving you the tools to succeed, and we'll celebrate these small wins together."

2) Agenda: Mediation Meeting (AAA, John, and Mediator)

Objective: To reach a non-adversarial agreement on project expenditures.

- I. Opening: Mediator explains the non-adversarial process and the goal of reaching a solution owned by both parties.
 - II. Issue Identification: Each party shares their view of the roadshow setup conflict without interruptions.
 - III. Focusing on Real Issues: Shifting the focus from "who is in charge" to "how to manage logistics and vibrancy effectively".
 - IV. Generating Options: Brainstorming creative ways to balance cost-cutting with project vision.
 - V. Agreement Construction: Drafting a formal protocol for future logistical changes.
 - VI. Closing: Summarizing the agreement to ensure mutual understanding.

3) Script: "Win-Win" Meeting (AAA and John)

Objective: AAA uses a win-win strategy to fix the underlying problem with John.

AAA: "John, I wanted to talk about the roadshow setup. I realize that changing the equipment list without consulting you caused the program to not go as planned, and I apologize for that."

John: "It was frustrating because I had a specific vision for the vibrancy of the event."

AAA: "I understand. My goal was purely to save the center money, which I know we both value. Instead of me making changes alone, how about we create a 'Logistics & Budget' sync?"

John: "What does that look like?"

AAA: "I will identify all potential cost savings for the equipment, but I will present them to you for approval before I call the vendor. That way, you keep the project vision, and I help with the budget. Does that work for you?"

John: "That sounds like a fair way to move forward."
